BBL Mining Office Lüderitzbucht

Introduction

(a) Historical Background

According to an imperial decree dated 25 March 1888 the Deutsche Kolonialgesellschaft für Südwestafrika (DKGfSWA) was given the comprehensive mining and land concessions rights over the whole of the Protectorate German South West Africa. The Kolonialgesellschaft was thereby bound to administer mining in general. Thus the "Bergamt der deutschen Kolonialgesellschaft für Südwestafrika" was created.¹ The office was to be located at the same place as the imperial commissioner's office, which in at the time was Otjimbingwe.

By another degree, dated 15 August 1889, the administrative duties in connection with mining were transferred to the government, without depriving the DKGfSWA of its mining concessions. The official in charge, "Berghauptmann" Frielinghaus remained in office until March 1891².

The proclamation by the imperial Governor of the German South West Africa of 29 December 1909 stipulated that the districts of Keetmanshoop, Gibeon, Lüderitzbucht, Warmbad, Bethanien and Maltahöhe should fall under the jurisdiction of the Mining Office at Lüderitzbucht. The area north of Sylvia Hill was by proclamation of 28.4.1910 declared part of the Swakopmund Mining Office.³

The history of the Mining Office of Lüderitzbucht is closely connected with the history of diamond mining. The first diamonds were supposed to have been discovered near Berseba by the Mukorob Mining Syndicate.⁴ Later it became known however, that the blueground in that area was non-diamondbearing. The existence of the blue-ground led to the founding of the Gibeon Schürf- und Handelsgesellschaft m.b.H., Berlin, which obtained the concession to explore the blue-ground systematically in 1903.⁵

Rumours of diamond finds frequently made the rounds without ever being verified. The so-called "Xenia-Expedition" was much in the news in 1906 in the Cape Colony and in G.S.W.A., when it was planned to prospect the British Islands off the South-West-African coast. The Cape Government forbade the venture as they viewed the guano on the islands a safer source of income, than the diamond rumours.⁶

In April 1908 a migrant railway worker from the Cape Colony ("Cape boy"), Zacharias Lewala, who worked with August Stauch on the railway line Lüderitz/Aus at km 24 found a diamond. Stauch immediately bought up the prospecting rights in form of "Schürfscheine" of the DKGfSWA which held the mining concessions of that area on 18 April 1908.⁷

By 27 June 1908, when the mining and prospecting activities had become more general in nature the government ordered the purchase of 21 "Schürfscheine" from the DKGfSWA and the "Bezirksamtman" and his staff rushed off to reserve fields for the state. The state geologist, Dr. Paul Range, later acquired more fields for the government.⁸ Dr. Range was not yet convinced in his report dated 19.7.1908 as to the feasibility of diamond mining by the state and recommended that a financially strong German company should do the prospecting and mining. He feared the capital risk for the state, as alluvial diamonds had never before been found in such abundance that mining on a grand scale in a forbidding terrain as the Namib had been profitable.⁹

Soon, however, a veritable hunt for mining fields was in progress, as the rights of priority prevailed which often led to legal problems. The latter were generally solved by arrangement. The confusion straightened out as companies and syndicates began to be established and started consolidating the mining and prospecting rights.

By a proclamation of the Imperial Colonial Office of 22 September 1908 the area south of the 26 °S, to the Orange River was declared a "Sperrgebiet" or prohibited area where only the DKGfSWA had the prospecting rights.¹⁰ The company could however pass the rights on to others. By this move a fragmentation of the diamond area was prevented and the state received a chance to claim their part of the riches.¹¹

Legislation pertaining to diamond prospecting and mining as well as their marketing was totally lacking, as was experience in this field when the diamonds were discovered. The result were a number of regulations and proclamations which often were annulled by other proclamations as they had proved impracticable or utterly useless. A diamond administration had to be established to ensure orderly marketing, export, control etc. A police force to patrol the diamond fields, enforce law and order there and keep the control over the growing number of undesirables which had soon started arriving since the discovery of diamonds had become known. Thus the "Diamantenregie" and the "Felderpolizei" were established. On 21.10.1908 it became an offence to be in possession of or trade with uncut or rough diamonds and only persons who could produce the appropriate permit were allowed to do so.¹² The permits were handed to reliable persons at the cost of 1,000 Marks.¹³ In 1909 the police of Lüderitz consisted of one "Wachtmeister" (Station Commander) and 10 constables and the 10 additional field stations boasted another 26 officers.¹⁴

The Diamantenregie, according to the proclamation of 16.1.1909, was solely responsible for the marketing of diamonds and every miner had to market his finds through this organization.¹⁵ The Diamantenregie determined the maximum quantity of diamonds to be marketed to ensure a healthy trade. The "Bergwerkspachtgesellschaft", a company which exploited the state-owned fields was also established. This company paid 75% of its netto-income as rent to the state.¹⁶

The way in which the Diamantenregie handled the sales of diamonds was most controversial. In spite of the proclamation which stipulated that the Diamantenregie should work to the producers' greatest possible advantage the sales methods were often criticized.¹⁷ There were no representatives of the miners on the board of the Diamantenregie. This situation changed gradually and even by 1914 talks amongst all diamond producers of Southern Africa were held in London. The joint marketing of diamonds was discussed, but the outbreak of the war halted the production of diamonds.¹⁸

The First World War interrupted the diamond production. On 19.9.1914, Lüderitzbucht was occupied by a British-South African naval invasion force.¹⁹ After the German surrender on 9.7.1915 many reservists returned to Lüderitz and the diamond fields and the Chamber of Mines held talks with the military authorities on the re-opening of mining activities. Permission was granted, but the carat amount was limited to 10,000 carats per producer. During 1916 the Union Government sold a large quantity of South West African diamonds and in 1917 they were sold jointly by De Beers and the Diamanten Syndikat and production started picking up. At the end of the war production had reached about a third of the pre-war production. In 1920 H.C. Hull and E. Oppenheimer founded the *Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa Ltd.*²⁰ The German proprietors sold their shares for half in cash and half in shares of *C.D.M.*²¹

When diamonds were found near the Orange River Mouth in 1928, the 1929 Wall Street stock market crash and the ensuing world-wide recession stopped production totally. This situation continued till about 1935.²² The importance of the northern fields declined, while that of the Orange River Mouth deposits gained gradually until the headquarters of C.D.M. were transferred to Oranjemund in 1943.²³ The mining office at Lüderitz was closed down on the 31st October 1925.²⁴ All the correspondence concerning mining and prospecting in the district and all other matters connected with mining were put under the jurisdiction of the

(b) The origin of the Namibian diamonds

The origin of the diamonds at first remained unclear. There were two theories. One, favoured by Dr. Merensky and Wagner, states that pipes of Kimberlite exist in the seabed out of which the gems washed and transported to the shore by the current. The second theory claimed the inland Kimberlite pipes as sources and rivers and streams transported the stones towards the ocean which then deposited them along the beaches.²⁶ The latter is now the generally accepted theory.²⁷ The fact that diamonds are found quite far inland is attributed to the lifting of the continental shelf.

(c) The documents and their arrangements

The documents are arranged in the following sections:

- | | |
|------|--------------------------------|
| I | German files, not renumbered |
| II | German files, re-numbered (OF) |
| III | Conversion files (C) |
| IV | General files (G) |
| V | Diamond files (M) |
| VI | Miscellaneous files |
| VII | Unregistered files |
| VIII | Telegrams |
| IX | Registers and lists |

The old German files in Section I have been arranged according to their original file numbers, while the German files in section II have been arranged by their OF-numbers. These OF-numbers were allocated by the Mining Office after 1915. The original German number and the German title have also been given in the description.

The conversion files in Section III have been arranged according to the numbers allocated by the Mining Office. Although most of these files concern the German period, some files contain documents from the period after the take-over.

The General files in Section IV are the files created by the mining authorities of the Union Government.

Diamond files of Section V are files created by the Mining Office of Lüderitzbucht concerning mainly diamonds handed in at the Mining Office, but also contain files on various other mining subjects.

The Miscellaneous files of Section VI consist of only two files concerning diamond companies dated from 1914-1920.

The Unregistered files of Section VII contain documents on a variety of subjects from 1909-1914.

The telegrams in Section VIII are carbon copies of the office's outgoing telegrams in form of telegram books.

Section IX contains the registers kept by the office as well as its financial records from 1909 to 1925.

The documents are in good condition and consist of 51 volumes, registers and lists and occupy 6 linear metres shelving space.

A substantial amount of files originating from the BBL fonds had been transferred to the IMW (Inspector of Mines Windhoek) fonds. They are listed in an appendix, arranged by the original file numbers with reference to the storage units in IMW.
